

Christmas in California

I live in Southern California. Christmas in Southern California is not like Christmas in other places. There are many things that remind people of Christmas. People often think that Christmas is cold and that there is snow. If there is snow and very cold weather, children like to make snowmen and snow angels. Many people enjoy skiing on ice and sledding on snowy hills. When it is cold, people make fires in their fireplaces to keep warm in their houses. When it is cold, people wear sweaters on their bodies, hats on their heads, boots on their feet, gloves on their hands, and scarves around their necks.

However, I live in Southern California, and it is not very cold here. In December, it is often warm and sunny. Sometimes it rains in December, but it is common to have a warm and sunny day on Christmas. Sometimes, I wear sweaters and boots because I like how they look. I seldom wear hats or scarves or gloves because it is too hot to wear them.

Sometimes, I think I am lucky to have Christmas in Southern California, and sometimes, I am sad that I do not live in a place where it is cold and it snows. I do not have fires in my fireplace because it would be too hot. It is more common for me to turn on the air conditioner in my house instead of the heater on Christmas day!

Even though I do not live in a place where it snows, most of the time, I like Christmas in Southern California. In Southern California, people put Christmas lights on palm trees, and it is very beautiful! In Southern California, people can go to the beach even on Christmas Day. Even though I can't go sledding or make a snowman on Christmas, I like living in Southern California.
